"Among the chief railway and commercial centers of the state, Fort Worth is up and doing in these days of recuperation and will close the century as one of the leading cities of the great south. Its extraordinary growth from 6000 in 1880 to 23,000 in 1890 leads to much speculation as to the increase during the present decade. Real estate is feeling a quickened pulse while building grows more active." The foregoing is taken from the American Land and Title Register.
